Actors Are Needed On Television

By ALVIN MOSLEY
HOLLYWOOD — Wanted for television: Handsome actors, not too young or too expensive, to hold hands with Lorcia Young and Jane Wyman.

Television has other shortages—actors, but the leading man-situation is approaching disaster.

This is the big problem of Ruth Burch, who is one of the most sought-after women in television.

Miss Burch, who is 32, has been casting director for 16 filmed TV shows, including "You Are There," "Frontier," "The Screen Directors' Playhouse," "The Burns and Allen Show" and "Went Early."

Need Leading Men

Her worst headache, she decided today, is finding leading men for Lorcia and Jane.

"They're limited on the money they can spend for leading men," she says. "The stars are too expensive. The casting director explained, 'The men must be too young, either.'"

"Then when we do find some body like George Nader to play Q. T. Waggoner, they become stars and we're stuck again."

There's no shortage of middle-aged character actors, she added. Most TV writers put "mostly men in their stories."

Miss Burch works up to 16 hours a day at various TV film studios. After reading the script, she makes a list of several actors for each part and fills them to make sure they're available. They hurry over for interviews with producers and directors, who usually make the final decision.

As one actor says, "If you don't know Ruth Burch, you don't work in TV."

Each Tuesday the casting director talks to 50 new players in four hours, "kids from San Francisco, Chicago, New York or little theaters. I have to keep in touch with who's new in town."

Writing John Pfeiffer
With no more new TV shows being filmed here instead of originating live in New York, employment for actors in Hollywood has nosed.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By
Dr. H. C. Chiles

It is interesting and encouraging to note that Christ repeatedly and freely used His great power to help who were in need. Two cases are described in this lesson.

I. Power Over Death, Luke 7:11-17.

Writing as the Holy Spirit directed him, with exquisite literary skill and without any elaboration of details, Luke recorded for us an interesting incident which took place at the beautiful village of Nain, in central Palestine. He enumerated enough particulars to give us a vivid picture of what took place there. This story clearly portrays three things.

1. A sad procession.

As the Saviour, attended by His disciples and a multitude of others, approached Nain, they came upon a scene of gloom and sadness. A funeral procession emerged from the gate on the way to the cemetery. A dead body was being carried out for burial.

It is well to remember that the mode of burial among the Jews was not the same as it is with us. With them the corpse was wrapped carefully in linen and then laid on an open bier within plain view of all who observed the procession, after which it was carried to the tomb. The bier, which had narrow sides, was borne by friends who relieved each other at frequent intervals.

Those who were in the procession were on their way to the cemetery to bury a young man, who had been taken away in the prime of life. His departure was a reminder that no one is exempt from death. While the old may die, it is also true that the young may do so. However, death never seems so cruel as when it cuts one off in the bloom of life.

What made this case even more sad was the fact that he was the only son of a widow. Moreover, he was the only son she ever had. She had been on that road before, having gone to that cemetery on a kindred errand, namely, the burial of her husband. Time may have mercifully and partially removed the keen edge of her previous sorrow, but now a season of great trial had come to her with the passing of her only son. None but a mother knows the agony of burying a dear son; it must be experienced in order to be understood. She might have borne her loss more better if she could have been soothed and loved by other children. Instead, she was left childless, which, to the Jews, was an almost intolerable affliction. This broken-hearted mother wept because the center of her affections and the comfort and support of her advancing years had been taken away from her. Many sympathetic citizens of Nain accompanied the widowed mother in the sad funeral procession.

2. A sympathetic person.

When Christ saw the procession and the extreme grief of the poor mother on account of the death of her broad-winner, He pitied her with an overmastering compassion. Her great need simply caused His heart to be filled with compassion toward her. The only appeal that was made to Him was that of the sorrow of the mother's heart. Human tears touched His tender heart. While the entire circumstances pleaded silently, but eloquently, on her behalf, the intercession of the Lord was unobstructed.

3. A supernatural performance.

Our Lord's compassion immediately went forth in action. No room had the feelings of pity arisen within Him than He insisted that the bereaved mother not weep because He was about to remove the cause of her sorrow.

Without any ceremony or display Christ very courageously walked over and touched the bier. Awe by his touching the bier, those who bore it stood still, filled with wonder, amazement, suspense and expectation. They realized that they were in the presence of One Who had the right to stop them, even on their way to the tomb. Silently and reverently they waited to hear what He had to say and to see what He might do. Of course, it was thought that He had defied Himself, inasmuch as touching a bier was equivalent to contact with a leper. That quiet voice of pity and power said, "Young man, I say unto thee, Arise." To the astonishment of all who heard Him command death to release the young man and life to take possession of him, he sat up and began talking. When Christ gave the young man back to his mother, that terribly dark day became the most blessed in her experience.

II. Power Over Discouragement, Luke 7:18-23.

John the Baptist had been faithful in proclaiming Christ as the Lamb of God Who had come to take away the sin of the world, but he had not foreseen that the Saviour would be rejected by the nation—and what a glorious rejection would not be established forthwith.

For his bold and fearless reproval of Herod and Herodias for their adultery, the great preacher was imprisoned in a fortress at Machaerus on the eastern shore of the Dead Sea. While languishing in prison, John the Baptist thought much of that One Whom he had been privileged to baptize in the Jordan river—Jesus. He had not lost sight of that He had expected Him to do, he was greatly perplexed.

In his discouragement John the Baptist did the right thing. He sent two of his disciples to ask the Lord Jesus, "Art Thou He that should come, or look we for another?" Knowing that these men could relate what they saw much better than words, He could not have used any more eloquent method of answering John's question.

After Christ had supplied these messengers with abundant facts, they returned to John the Baptist and informed him of the Lord's works of mercy upon the poor and the needy. They simply prepared the things which they had seen, doing of how the sick were healed instantly and even the dead were raised from their graves. They told of miracles the like of which he had never seen. To John this was unanswerable proof that Christ was the Messiah. Their message completely allayed all of his fears and gave him the satisfying assurance that his work of preparing the way for Christ had not been in vain.

CHAPTER FOUR
A BRISK walk up and down the lane freshened Lora. She regained the house and let herself through the front door. The dim, chilly hallway was silent and she found herself instinctively tiptoeing toward the stairs. Then, moved by a whim, she paused with one hand on the newel post. So far she had been faced by so many closed doors that she had seen little of this house. The front room opposite the library must be the parlor, and there was no reason why she should not look in and see what the room was like.

She opened the door softly and blinked at the thick gloom. Not only were the shutters closed, but heavy draperies had been pulled across the windows, shutting out any seepage of daylight and turning the room to shadowy night. Lora remembered the candle she had seen on the hall table with a packet of friction matches beside it and she got it quickly. The striking of a match sounded all too loud in the quiet hall, but she lit the candle and went into the dark parlor.

The draperies were of wine-colored velvet and most of the furniture was dark, well-polished walnut. From the wall above the mantel a portrait looked down at her. Thinly veiled, the face of the man in the picture and for a moment she thought it was a portrait of Wade. But the full-lipped mouth was more sensual, perhaps a little cruel, and there was none of Wade's likeable appeal in the portrayed gaze. One sensed something robust and hearty, but no great sensitivity.

This then must be Wade's father. It was difficult to imagine the grim old lady who held court in the rear parlor as the wife of this florid-faced man with the stamp of easy living upon him.

Someone whispered from the doorway and she looked about to see Jenny beckoning to her insistently.

"What is it?" she asked.

He put a finger to his lips and tiptoed into the room. "Sh! Grandmother will hear you. You'd better come out quickly. You're not supposed to come in the parlor," Jenny whispered. "Grand-

Shoot 'Em Up Rescues Guy Madison

By VERNON SCOTT
United Press Staff Correspondent
HOLLYWOOD, Nov. 18.—It took a first rate shoot-'em-up on television to haul Guy Madison from the brink of obscurity back to motion pictures. Now he's gathered the courage to make the kind of movies that almost ruined him in the first place.

Five years ago Guy was labeled a "pretty boy" who couldn't act for our apples.

"I tried to stay away from straight parts and romantic leads," Guy said, "but it didn't work. They kept making a lover out of me until the roof fell in."

"Action films were right down my alley—especially Westerns, but nobody agreed with me. I'm an outdoor guy to begin with. I like hunting and fishing. But on the screen I had to make with a coat and tie."

"Wild Bill" Brought Offers
Guy's move layoff lasted two-and-a-half years. During that time his "Wild Bill Hickok" series caught the attention of producers and the offers began to roll in.

"When I decided to try pictures again I made up my mind to do no more than three Westerns a year."

"Now things have changed. I've strayed away from action stuff, and so far nobody's tarred and feathered me."

In "Five Against the House" Madison played a college character, and in his new epic at 20th Century - Fox, "Threshold of Space," he plays a scientist. Neither role called for the usual

The following ways of protecting rose bushes from freezing this winter are given by N. R. Elliott, horticulturist at the University of Kentucky:

(1) Make a mound of soil about 12 inches high and 15 to 18 inches wide at the bottom around each bush; (2) use tobacco or corn stalks and tie around the rose bushes, several layers, then mound leaves around the stalks, and (3) mound leaves around the plant and cover with something to keep the leaves from blowing away.

Said Prof. Elliott: "No 1 is by far the most satisfactory and easiest to do."

TELLS ABOUT THE DYNAMITE

Hatless and handcuffed, John Gilbert Graham is shown in custody in Denver, where he told how he secreted 25 sticks of dynamite in his mother's luggage. He insured her for $37,500.

This is the drive-in restaurant Mrs. Daisy King built for Graham, the son who admitted deliberately causing her plane crash death.

A SUICIDE WATCH was maintained over John Gilbert Graham, 23, in Denver, Colo., as authorities sought to have him transferred from federal to state control in the dynamiting of a United Airlines plane which caused the death of his mother and the 43 other persons aboard. He was heard to mutter about suicide "as soon as they stop watching me." Under federal law he could get 10 years for peacetime sabotage. Under state law, death for the biggest mass murder in memory. The materials then are removed and the soil around the plants is cultivated.
